Eine Stadt wird erst durch Kunst und Kultur zur Stadt, eine Stadt ohne Kultur ist keine Stadt.

A large wall display on the left side of the gallery. It features a large white graphic element on the far left, possibly a stylized letter 'R'. The main display area contains several panels of text and images, including a small portrait and a poster. The text is in German and discusses the history and culture of the city.

A central circular display table with a blue top and a white base. On the table, there are several white rectangular blocks, a bust of a person's head, a stack of books, a small model of a building, and a mannequin wearing a long, light-colored dress. The table is surrounded by a low blue wall. A person is standing in the foreground, looking at the table.

A series of display cases on the right side of the gallery. The cases are dark blue and contain various posters and images. One poster is titled 'KUNST' and another is titled 'NEU WASSER FOLGEN'. The cases are arranged in a row, creating a sense of depth.
